Comments from SEMINAR Participants

FROM A TEACHER IN PHILADELPHIA:

"I learned that there is a lot of misleading information on the internet. We must help students learn to develop their critical thinking skills."

FROM A PREVENTION SPECIALIST IN STATE COLLEGE:

"I enjoyed learning how to use technology to help students create public service messages."

FROM AN ADMINISTRATOR IN PHILADELPHIA:

"I learned a lot about prescription drugs. This is an area that I did not know as much about. I also learned how to deconstruct ads."

Young people today have more exposure to images of drug and alcohol use—and more avenues for obtaining drugs and alcohol for their own use—than ever before.

In an era of exploding youth access to media—fueled not only by television and music but also by mobile devices, texting, video games, online chats and social media—empowering students to understand all forms of media literacy is paramount.

Drug Free Pennsylvania's fifth annual media literacy seminars, Media Literacy and Its Impact on Substance Abuse, will feature top authorities in the field of media literacy:

Renee Hobbs, Ed.D.

*Temple University
Lead Presenter,
Philadelphia & State College*

Brian Primack, M.D.

*University of Pittsburgh
Lead Presenter,
Pittsburgh & State College*

Renee Hobbs, Ed.D., is the founder of the Temple University Media Education Lab and helps educators globally to address media literacy through research, curriculum development and advocacy. Brian Primack, M.D., is internationally recognized for his research on the effect of mass media messages on adolescent health.

The goal of the seminars is to provide educators with an understanding of the core concepts of media literacy through interactive, hands-on applications such as dissecting advertisements, writing public service announcements (PSAs), and analyzing the ways companies market their products. These skills can then be implemented in the classroom or during after-school programs to teach children how to make healthy lifestyle decisions regarding substance abuse. With the increased concern over prescription drug abuse among teens, we will be targeting the instruction toward this topic.

Registration

The cost for the conference is $100 per attendee. There is a full-time college student discount of $75 per attendee. The registration fee covers meals and seminar materials. Registration ends October 26, 2011.
